Not illustrated. 1881 Excerpt: .as he lacks a knowledge of its peculiar characteristics, and prosperity requires one specially familiar with its manipulation. B is met by A and the opening discussed. B has had the required experience and understands the business. The conference terminates in the formation of a co-partnership in which A furnishes the capital for purchasing and conducting the enterprise, and B supplies the skill and ingenuity for its prosperous manipulation: thus the interests of each are enhanced by the consolidation. The circumstances which demonstrate that a copartnership exists are the implied evidences that an agreement has been entered into by the parties composing it. This agreement may exist in the form of a written instrument bearing the signatures of the parties in interest, or may rest in a verbal understanding between them. It is a common occurrence to find the objects and conditions of a co-partnership placed in some book of account with the view of forming an original entry, and therein stating, in a stereotyped manner, the amount invested by each, together with such general facts as go to make up a brief introduction to the business. In the absence of anything further being expressed in any other place, showing additional facts being agreed upon by the co-partners, this is accepted, in law, as effective and binding, so far as the conditions are stated. All subsequent entries made in the books, bearing upon the proprietary interests, will, in this case also, be taken as equally competent....
