The pulpit has disappeared, eleven of the pillars in the south end have come down and the greater part of the roof. In the front court, towards its north end is a dargab, 21 feet square, covered by a dome, and containing three graves. Outside the walls, to the south of the town, are several Musulman tombs, known as the Rauzas of Muhammad Tahir, of a Qzi, of Shaikh Sarah, and c. (Plate XXX). The domes of these are supported on old sculptured Hindu pillars of white marble. On the capital of one of these (Plate XIII, figs. 2, 3) is a short inscription in Devanilgari recording the setting up of the column by the wife of jyd in Samvat 1250. The Khan Sarovar. Plates V, XXXI-XXXIV. The Khan Sarovar is the largest tank still in use at Patau and...
